A few years ago my military friend was in town and he was on his way to stay the night at my place. I'm a black male. I decided to go buy some alcohol for us and a liquor store down the street that I've never been to before. Was wearing my lazy cloths; sweats, t-shirt, hoodie, backwards hat so I didn't have to do my hair.

Walk in and immediately getting eyed from the cashier. I ignore it head to the back of the store where the jack honey is (my friends favorite). I grab a bottle and turn around and see a bunch of fancy shooters on a shelf. Out of no where the cashier charges at me saying "those aren't for sale! What are you up to? Your very suspicious!". I ask, "well why display them then and how tf am I suspicious?".

I don't usually use the race card but told them they have been staring at me from since I got in and it feels like it's because I'm black. They noticed the other customers were now listening and said to "whatever just get out of here now". I left cursing them out..
